

STUDY AREA

Bandon, West Cork, is a growing regional town with a population of 8,196 (Census 2022), located approximately 30 km southwest of Cork City. Its role as both a commuter town and gateway to West Cork makes public transport accessibility an important consideration for residents and visitors.

KEY MESSAGE

Population vulnerability is spatially uneven and does not follow exactly the same pattern as public transport accessibility. Higher values indicate greater relative concentrations of the demographic, health, economic-status and household characteristics included in the vulnerability model. The index should not be interpreted as a direct measure of transit dependence, observed demand or the number of people who require public transport. Its principal purpose is to identify locations where weaker accessibility may have greater potential planning significance.
